THE Public Administration Clearing House was established in 1931 to serve as an exchange for information, experience, and ideas among organizations of public officials and others in the United States and Canada which are engaged in the active work of planning for improvements in the administrative technique of government.

It has been financed for its ordinary needs by special grants and funds so that it makes no general appeal for memberships or contributions. It exercises care not to engage in any activity that is being carried on by any existing organization. It has no political objectives, no political schemes or plans to advocate or to oppose. Its sole purpose is to facilitate the exchange of knowledge and experience useful to public administrators.

PREFACE

THIS second edition of a Directory of voluntary organizations working in the general field of public administration or in fields that impinge upon and affect public administration has been compiled for use by these organizations themselves, by public officials, and by students of government, as an index to sources of information.

The first edition of this Directory was published in October 1932. That it has proved useful to many of the organizations listed, and to others interested in public administration, has been demonstrated by the many requests received for a second and revised edition. An effort has been made to improve the contents of the volume in accordance with suggestions that have been received from many sources, but, in general, the changes made have been designed only to bring the information up to date.

This edition of the Directory, as was the first, is confessedly incomplete since it arbitrarily excludes all organizations whose activities are confined to a particular city or other local government unit, listing (with very few exceptions) no organization that is not at least state-wide in its range.

The principles which governed the selection and arrangement of the organizations listed are outlined in the introduction to the volume. It should be said here, however, that an attempt was made to include not only organizations composed of public administrators but also those which by cooperation or the joint occupancy of particular fields of work affect the course and practice of public administration.

Organizations having their sole or principal interest in the political or legislative activities of government have been omitted unless at the same time they carry on some particular work in the field of administration. Some organizations have been omitted, no doubt, because they were undiscovered by the staff. Others have been omitted because it was impossible to obtain sufficiently accurate information concerning them.

Additional information concerning any organization listed in this Directory may be obtained by direct correspondence with its secretary, or, if for any reason that is not deemed desirable, by application to the Public Administration Clearing House, 850 East 58th Street, Chicago, Illinois.

The Clearing House also has information concerning some hundreds of local organizations in this general field which are not listed in the Directory.

While I am responsible for the decisions of policy which determined the scope of the Directory, and must, therefore, take the blame for the principal errors that have been made, the credit for the work of organizing and compiling the Directory belongs to Robert Myron Paige.

"The Americans of all ages, all conditions and all dispositions constantly form associations. They have not only commercial and manufacturing companies in which all take part but associations of a thousand other kinds, religious, moral, serious, futile, restricted, enormous, or diminutive. The Americans make associations to give entertainments, to found establishments for education, to send missionaries to the antipodes, and in this manner they found hospitals, prisons, schools. . . . Wherever at the head of some new undertaking you see the government in France or a man of rank in England, in the United States you will be sure to find an association."

INTRODUCTION

I. SCOPE OF DIRECTORY

PUBLIC Administration may be defined as the administration or management of those many and varied activities which have been and are being undertaken by public authorities—federal, state, and municipal. This Directory lists and describes the voluntary, unofficial associations, organizations and agencies which have some direct or apparent relationship to the processes of public administration. Public administration is the product of constitutions, charters, statutes and legal codes which provide the rigid framework for government and the men and women operating within this framework who attempt to meet and satisfy the collective needs of society. Into this picture of Public Administration we must, however, bring many voluntary, extra-legal, organizations and agencies. On the one hand these agencies modify, interpret and extend the formal framework of Public Administration. On the other hand they encourage, restrain, guide, advise and in other ways affect the activities of public officials and public employees in the performance of their administrative duties. Through these "Organizations in the Field of Public Administration," therefore, it is possible to influence profoundly both the legal framework of Public Administration and the men and women who make Public Administration a living, vital organism. It is the purpose of this Directory to list these voluntary associations which are so definitely a part of the American governmental set-up. Descriptions of the following types of organizations will be found herein:

1. Organizations of Public Officials. Of the unofficial agencies influencing, affecting, or in some way closely related to public administration, organizations composed of public officials and public employees are of first importance. These associations may be accounted for in a large number of instances by the natural desire of those engaged in similar work to come together and "talk shop." Their annual meetings and special committees provide excellent opportunities for discussions and attempts at solving many common problems. Such organizations have proved to be particularly useful in the United States because of the decentralized form of government existing in this country. Voluntary associations of public officials have provided much needed facilities for communication among federal, state and local officers, legally almost entirely independent of one another. By promoting voluntary cooperation among independent authorities these organizations have promoted administrative uniformity, formulated and secured the wide acceptance of standards of administrative practices, and in other ways provided in the United States a substitute for that centralization of authority in Federal and state governments, which has been deemed necessary in many other countries.

Not all of the associations of public officials can be said to exist primarily for the promotion of cooperation and uniformity of practice among administrative officers. A large number of associations are concerned with the professional in terests of their members. Relatively few of these groups are interested chiefly in wages, hours, and pensions; most of them are concerned with professional improvement, standards of competence for entrance into the profession, codes of ethical conduct and the like, as well as with the economic status of their members. These professional, technical, or functional groups are not always composed exclusively of public officials. If the technique around which an organization is established is employed in private as well as in governmental enterprise, only a part of the membership of such an association may be governmentally employed. But many of these mixed associations influence public administration as significantly as do those composed exclusively of public employees.

2. Organizations of Citizens. Public administration also is influenced by many organizations of private lay citizens. Some of these citizen groups have been formed specifically to influence administrative practice in government. Such an organization may be interested in government in general and in all phases of public administration, or may devote its attention only to some special phase of government. Other citizen organizations occupy the field of public administration jointly with governmental agencies by carrying on a type of activity which is designed to benefit an entire community and which in other communities has been delegated to a public body. In the field of public welfare and social work, for example, there are many voluntary associations which share their field of work with governmental bodies. Such associations necessarily are in close contact with governmental agencies working in related fields.

Many citizen associations primarily social, fraternal, or cultural in purpose frequently manifest an interest in some of the problems of public administration and exert a definite influence upon the solution of such problems.

Still another type of citizen organization influencing government is the commercial, trade, or labor association. These groups have been formed to promote cooperation and measures which will advance the economic interests of their members. All of them actively concern themselves with those phases of public administration which directly affect the economic interests which they represent.

It will be realized from the above outline of the types of organizations included in the Directory that an extremely large number of associations are within its scope. Certain rather arbitrary limitations and restrictions have been adopted, however, which reduce the number of organizations listed. These limitations are of two kinds, substantive and geographical.

1. Substantive Limitations. A special effort has been made to include in the Directory all organizations of public officials and of those publicly employed. The only exception to this rule has been made in the case of associations of teachers. Teachers are employed by publicly supported schools, and by virtue of this fact all of their associations are within the scope of the Directory. But there is an association of educators in every branch and sub-branch of knowledge. The number of these groups necessitated the adoption of a policy of including only the larger and more important ones and those groups interested in administrative aspects of education.

Political groups, political parties, and all other groups interested exclusively in matters of public policy and not in public administration have been omitted.

Only a comparatively small number of trade associations are included in this Directory. Since the publication of the first Directory in 1932, we have seen the passage of the National Industrial Recovery Act and the setting up of code authorities. The regulation of business under the N. R. A. is a governmental administrative activity which has brought practically every trade association in the country directly into "the field of public administration." However, as these trade associations are listed elsewhere<sup>1</sup> we have adhered to the same general rule adopted in the preparation of our 1932 Directory, and have listed only the trade associations which are interested in phases of public administration other than the regulation of business and industry.

Organizations in the field of international relations have also been omitted from the Directory as they deal chiefly with matters of public policy and only to a very limited extent with those things within the realm of the public administrator.

Fraternal organizations, societies, and social clubs, have been omitted unless the national organization as a whole has manifested a definite interest in some governmental administrative activity.

A special type of citizen agency, the foundation or trust fund, has been omitted, as in most cases foundations do not directly engage in governmental research or undertake to influence public administration, their activity being usually limited to the granting of appropriations to operating or spending agencies.

No attempt has been made to identify research agencies in any special way, as practically all the organizations listed engage in some research or investigational activity. The governmental research field is not fully comprehended by this Directory as groups local in scope have been omitted (explained below); and other important research groups such as governmental departments or bureaus, ad hoc temporary commissions, private firms of professional consultants, and university research centers all are agencies outside the scope of the present volume.

2. Geographical Limitations. The Directory is primarily devoted to organizations of the United States. Groups which are made up of constituent national organizations, in other words international federations, have not been listed. However, organizations which employ the word "international" in their titles to indicate that the membership includes Canadians and perhaps some members from other foreign countries, have been included. A separate Canadian Section has also been provided for Dominion-wide and Provincial organizations.

Only organizations at least state-wide in scope have been included in the State Section. State affiliates of national organizations which take an active interest in public administration have been listed wherever possible. However, the scope of the National Section is somewhat broader than that of the State Section. The National Section includes some organizations which although important have only an indirect contact with public administration, and several of such national groups have state affiliates not listed in the State Section.

Organizations less than state-wide in scope have been omitted from the present volume. The number of local groups is an almost insuperable obstacle to their complete and accurate listing; a listing limited to a single large city is by no means an easy task. Many local groups are affiliated with a national or state-wide agency and in this way most of the organizational movements of significance to public administration are represented in the Directory. However, there are Bureaus of Municipal Research, City Clubs, governmental research and civic departments of Chambers of Commerce, and other largely autonomous local agencies, engaging in activities and preparing reports which are of more than local significance, and the Public Administration Clearing House is in contact with these organizations and is prepared to furnish information concerning most of them.

<sup>1</sup> See "Commercial and Industrial Organizations of the United States," United States Department of Commerce (latest edition, 1931), $85.

II. NUMBER OF ORGANIZATIONS LISTED

The first edition of this Directory published in 1932 listed 1,744 organizations divided among the four sections of the Directory as follows:

|                              |      |                              |    |
|------------------------------|------|------------------------------|----|
| National Organizations ..... | 466  | Regional Organizations ..... | 65 |
| State Organizations .....    | 1131 | Canadian Organizations ..... | 82 |

The corresponding count for the present edition is:

|                              |      |                              |    |
|------------------------------|------|------------------------------|----|
| National Organizations ..... | 484  | Regional Organizations ..... | 85 |
| State Organizations .....    | 1243 | Canadian Organizations ..... | 89 |

The increase<sup>1</sup> in the number of organizations included in the second edition is accounted for chiefly by the fact that some organizations were excluded from the first edition on insufficient evidence. Only a few of the new organizations have been formed during the past two years.

III. EXPLANATION OF DESCRIPTIVE STATEMENTS

Summary statements have been prepared only for the national organizations. These statements are similar in form to those which appeared in the first edition of this Directory. In every case the organization was given an opportunity to correct and revise the statement prepared by the Clearing House. In a few cases, however, these statements were later revised to bring them into conformity with the style used throughout the Directory, and it is possible that in a few cases these final revisions contain some slight inaccuracies or misstatements of fact. Although we have used great care in compiling the Directory and have secured our information concerning the organizations listed from sources which we believe to be reliable, the Public Administration Clearing House does not undertake to guarantee the accuracy of the information in this volume.

A uniform style has been followed in drawing up the summary-statements describing the National Organizations. Some explanation of the terminology employed may not be out of place. Under the caption Membership is indicated the type of membership as well as the number of members. Constituent means that the organization is made up of corporate or quasi-corporate bodies and that membership is formally limited to such groups; company, agency, organizational, and institutional mean nearly the same as constituent but have been used because it is customary to refer to the membership of certain organizations in these terms. Corporate indicates that the organization is legally incorporated and membership is limited to the directors or trustees mentioned in the charter and their successors. As used in this Directory corporate does not mean that the membership is made up of legally incorporated bodies; in this latter case the words constituent or company have been used. Individual means that membership is personal and usually that membership is open to all who are qualified; ex officio is the term used to indicate that membership is by virtue of the occupancy of some position or office; representative is the term used to indicate that the members have been selected to represent various groups and interests.

Under the captions Finance and Secretariat are grouped the material relating to the dues, budget, and staff. Figures for dues and budget are for the year period unless otherwise stated. Budgets are given in round numbers. The number of staff members is presumably the average number of paid employees, not including the chief executive officer.

Under the caption Activities organizations have been described in terms of what they do rather than in the more formal terms of their constitutions. It has been assumed that the purposes and the accomplishments of the organizations always include the fostering of fellowship, cooperation, and exchange of ideas among members. Committees and sections have been listed where their titles give some clue to the interests of the group.

Needless to say, the length of the statement required to describe an organization bears no necessary relationship to its importance or significance.

IV. ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

In securing the names and addresses of organizations believed to be within the scope of this Directory many sources were consulted. Most of the books and directories which were found to be helpful are listed in the Bibliography. In addition the editor had the cooperation of the following individuals in the preparation of the Sections devoted to State and Canadian organizations: Kenneth Warner, Frank Bates, Robert D. Dripps, Herman Kehrli, R. C. Atkinson, Myron H. Atkinson, Patrick Healy III, Albert Hall, Rupert F. Asplund, S. S. Kenworthy, John Pearson, C. E. Beals, William L. Bradshaw, W. N. Taylor, William P. Lovett, George C. S. Benson, Mrs. Charles E. Ellicott, George S. Hobbs, W. R. Lence, James Martin, C. A. Crosser, L. F. Parsons, Cullen B. Gosnell, E. P. Owen Jr., Mrs. Edith Valet Cook, Don C. Sowers, Morris B. Lambie, Harold Baumes, John F. Sly, Frederick N. MacMillin, F. D. Humphrey, Russell W. Barthell, K. R. B. Flint, Niels Christensen, Mrs. Royal C. Raft, Horace L. Brittain, C. A. Crosser, and E. E. McAdams.

The development of the informational facilities and resources of the Public Administration Clearing House during the three years of its existence has been due to the cooperation of a large number of individuals and organizations. Particularly helpful during this formative period have been the following organizations: American Legislators' Association, American Municipal Association, American Public Welfare Association, Governmental Research Association, International City Managers' Association, Municipal Finance Officers' Association, National Association of Housing Officials, Public Administration Service, and the United States Conference of Mayors. These organizations all have established their secretariats in the building occupied by the Public Administration Clearing House. All of these organizations have been of assistance in the preparation of this Directory, and to them the Clearing House acknowledges its indebtedness.

Letters and comments received after the publication of our first Directory led to the belief that the book was filling a genuine need and proving of service to those working in the field of public administration. The Public Administration Clearing House hopes that the present volume will prove more useful and that this Directory will result in the more extensive utilization of the informational facilities, the powerful group loyalties and the other resources of the organizations listed.

ROBERT M. PAIGE, Editor.

National Organizations

The complete names of the organizations have been used to alphabetize the summary statements. Inverted name or key-word cross reference lines which facilitate the discovery of the full name of an organization if only the significant word in its title is recalled have been inserted alphabetically throughout this section. However, particular attention is called to the fact that all of the national organizations have been classified by fields of activity in the classified section beginning on page 163.

Regional Organizations

Organizations listed in this section extend over several states. Organizations assigned to the same region do not necessarily have the same geographical scope. A regional organization may include only a few of the states within one of the four regions in which the group may have been placed. In some instances a regional organization may lie in two or even three of the four regions defined. In such cases the organization has been assigned to the region which contains the bulk of its membership.

Classification of National Organizations by Fields of Activity

Commonly used terms have been employed to designate subdivisions of the general field of public administration. These subdivisions represent a major or minor governmental activity or function. The subdivisions are not coordinate in scope or importance and have not been sharply defined. In cases of overlapping, reference has been made to related fields.

Organizations have been listed under the field of activity or function to which they are most closely related. Organizations listed under some of the subdivisions have wide interests and probably touch subdivisions other than those under which they are listed.

Only national organizations are included in this section.

Numbers following names of organizations refer to the pages upon which the descriptive statements appear.
